

With history and time, with rise and fall of groups and interests, with ascend and descend of institutions and civilizations the moral premises constantly move, as if some invisible hands weave the moral fabrics of the society in new patterns and renewed stable structures all the time. Things appear good and bad from the perspective of history and time and where one is embedded in the complex entanglement of forces and one`s position in the social structures that constantly move. Intentionality of actions, than the actions in-themselves become more relevant to moral judgement. Intentionality, in turn, involves knowledge, information and insight about the nature of the world and will of which one is a part....READ MORE
